2 Nazi Thrusts Are Stopped Russians Claim

Germans Say Odessa Captured but Moscow Denies Report

By the Associated Press
Soviet dispatches announced Friday that a stubborn Red army troops had broken two German spearhead thrusts into the key sector of Vyazma, 125 miles west of Moscow and Kalinin, 95 miles northwest of the capital.

While conceding that the danger was still extreme the Russians, nevertheless, said the German onslaught approaches of Moscow was caused as the Soviet armies of Marshal Timoshenko massed in front of the capital for a last ditch stand.

Berlin reports said Nazi troops were fighting at Moscow's outer defenses only 60 miles away at some points and had captured the important industrial sector south of the capital and a power station which supplied the Moscow industrial region.

Reports in London said members of the Soviet government itself were said to be moving to the interior city of Kazan, 450 miles east of Moscow.

U.S. Ambassador Lawrence Steinhardt and his embassy staff had already departed for the interior, reports said.

The Red army bulletin reported no gains for the Nazi invaders noting merely that the 16-day-old struggle was particularly fierce with vast destruction of men and machine on both sides.

Hitler's high command reported that Nazi warplanes in an attack on Soviet transports fleeing the besieged Black Sea port of Odessa had sunk or damaged 14 ships and that pursuit of the beaten foe is continuing between the sea of Azov and Donets river.

German dive bombers splattered Odessa's harbor as Soviet transports attempted to rescue trapped Red army troops from the burning city, the German command announced.

Hitler's high command said that allied Rumanian troops had captured Odessa Thursday, but BBC quoting a Moscow broadcast said that Axis forces striking at the city had been checked and forced to dig in, suffering heavy losses.

In Bucharest Rumanian crowds celebrated the reported fall of Odessa after a 59-day siege.

Undefeated Scrappers to Be Seeking Fourth Win of Season

The duly-elected president of Panama, Arnulfo Arias, struck a discordant note in hemisphere solidarity when, utterly without warning, he notified the United States and other Western World powers that the Republic of Panama would oppose any attempt to arm merchant ships for their protection in running the submarine-infested waters en route to England.

The president of Panama spoke, then took a hurried trip out of the country to Cuba.

Hardly had he left when a bloodless revolution broke out in Panama. Arias was thrown out of the presidency and succeeded by Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia, who promptly pledged the Republic of Panama to full co-operation in Western Hemisphere defense.

The sequel to this is newspaper change in Washington today that possibly the American government, unwilling to speak, had a secret hand in overthrowing Arias' government—thereby practicing in the Western World that philosophy of force which all of us are denouncing when practiced in Europe.

To all of which Secretary of State Hull today issues an indignant denial. This government, says Hull, had "no connection, direct or indirect," with Panama's revolution.

Secretary Hull being a man of the highest personal integrity, respected by all parties, his statement will be accepted as the absolute truth so far as any official action of the government is concerned.

Beyond that, what can one say? There are physical limits on the freedom of all nations. Little Panama, for instance, has no right to imperil the Panama Canal, property of big United States, without inviting trouble. That's one international law that is understood in all languages.

Secretary Hull says the United States exerted no hand in Panama's comic opera revolution.

Perhaps it was the way: The United States WOULD HAVE HAD TO EXERT A HAND TO SAVE THE GOVERNMENT OR ARIAS.

And that, indeed, is stretching the fabric of good neighborliness to the breaking point.

For it is rather obvious that what really happened is: The president of a small Central American republic was "reached" by foreign agents—and he got his just deserts, more probably from his own people than from any U.S. interference.

Nothing Inevitable, Even That Slump

Nothing is less certain to happen than the inevitable. That's a trick phrase, of course.

What's meant is "the inevitable" in short, just about the time men get together and say "This is inevitable," something else happens.

It may well be that way with the post-war slump. Some men are so sure of it that they positively revel in gloomy forebodings of "Oh, what a crash there's going to be when this thing is all over!"

It all seems so logical: the defense plants suddenly shut down; a couple of million men come streaming back from the army; the plug is pulled on unlimited federal spending; and down we all go in one great resounding crash that would make 1929 look like a feather-duster dropping off a footstool. It's the fact that everybody's expecting such a crash that first led us to think that maybe it won't happen. Everybody has been wrong so often.

One reassuring thing is that so many people are already thinking about ways to avoid that "inevitable" crash. Chairman Sloan of General Motors is only one big-time executive who has every department of his plant already intent on studying what may be done with new productive facilities after the defense emergency has passed. Many other executives have their eye on the same problem.

Similarly, many planning agencies and individuals interested in creating better living conditions, are already plotting out future needs. The Architectural Forum has set up a panel of 200 advisers to see what planning, zoning, design, construction, financing, taxation and building may contribute to keep productive rolling against any "post-war slump."

They have found, for instance, that

Navy Said to Have Ordered all U. S. Merchantships Out of Japanese Waters

WASHINGTON—(P)—Authorized quarters indicated Friday that all American ships had been ordered out of Japanese and Chinese waters because of the "situation in the Pacific."

Merchantships in the rest of the Pacific would not be affected it was indicated.

The navy reported by a reliable source to have ordered all ships to proceed to the nearest American or British ports, took this view:

"In view of the situation in the Pacific the navy has no comment to make."

The informant indicated strongly that the order had been issued.

MURDER IN PARADISE

By MARGUERITE GAHAGAN

THE STORY: Quiet Paradise Lake becomes anything but Eden when sophisticated Herbert Cord is murdered and his body discovered by Maude O'Connor and her school teacher daughter, Mary. Involved in the mystery are Jeanie Morris, whose romance of two summers with Cord terminates when he brings Margie Dixon to Paradise as his fiancée. Tod Palmer, local editor, who takes an affl for Jeanie. Innkeeper Chris Gordon, elderly Paradise resident who seems as baffled as the rest of the natives. Miss Millie Morris, Jeanie's straight-faced aunt who despised Cord; Mrs. Flora, old flame of Mary's and reporter covering the case, who agrees with Mary that Maude seems to know more than she is revealing. Inquest seems to fix the blame on gangster Stu Verett. Then Maude finds Miss Millie's beaten body in a boat. Jeanie confides to Mary how kind her aunt has always been.

LONELY PROSPECT

CHAPTER XI

THE wind had whipped up the lake still more by the time I started home and big black clouds were hanging down almost low enough to touch the tree tops. I hoped I had left Jeanie Morris in a happier mood than the weather displayed. I think perhaps I had, because the smile that tugged at the corner of her lips wasn't as strained when she said goodby as it had been when I arrived.

I wished that Tod Palmer would drop in the gloomy old house that evening. Jeanie needed something more than feminine companionship and without Miss Millie there to act as a glowering chaperon I believed Tod could bring more than a ghost of a smile to the girl's lips.

"Aunt Millie never had much use for the boys around here," Jeanie had confessed while rocky-faced, stern, old Liza Holmes brought us tea in heavenly paper-thin china cups. And after Liza had deposited the thin jelly sandwiches, Jeanie continued, "She never was one to talk of her girlhood, but I know that there was a broken romance.

"Knowing that helped me understand Aunt Millie. I once saw some pictures of her as a young girl in those funny bustle dresses and darling little hats. And once,"

National Defense Work Is Stressed At Legion Auxiliary Meet

Mrs. Albert Bevans, State President of the American Legion Auxiliary, spoke at the District Membership Conference in Texarkana, Thursday giving a few high lights of the National Convention of the American Legion in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She quoted in part "Four ways in which we can help in National Defense in the Home. First, we can give blood, to be preserved for emergencies.

Second, take First Aid Course.

Third, study food nutrition. Fourth, take Nurse Aid training, to be able to aid nurses where no technical training is required."

In the discussion on the "Good Neighbor Policy in South and Latin America," she said, that so many of our people go to South America with a patronizing superior attitude, but she continued, staring down at her tea cup as though hunting for some understanding of that girl who had lived in another era, "I was playing in the attic. It was a day much like this—gray and stormy—and in an old trunk I came across some letters—love letters. I was too little to be really interested in them, but years later I went up there for something and I couldn't find them. She must have taken them away."

"SHE must have seen a lot of changes around here," I said. "And some of them probably hurt. One hates to see the old ways go."

"Yes, that's true. It's even different from the days when I was a little girl and came here summers. Only Mr. Gordon's left of those old-Ulmers; I guess the lake was too quiet for most folks."

"Did he know your aunt?" "Yes, although she never was friendly with him. I suppose she classed him along with trades-people. That's what she used to do, you know."

"He's been here for ages. She didn't like him, though. Once when we went there for something I remember they had a quarrel. I didn't know what it was about, but I remember Aunt Millie was white with anger. Perhaps he overcharged her. Little things used to infuriate her, but anyway she never bothered to speak to him from then on, and she never went there again for anything."

"Aunt Millie was going to have it fixed," she said, and her eyes filled with tears. "Who could have done that to her? I can't understand it. Why should anyone want her out of the way? She never hurt anyone."

I pulled my hat down tighter and my sweater up closer around my neck. But I managed to smile and to break the sense of gloom.

"Please come over," I said. "Once things have quieted down, you'll need people around you."

She nodded and pushed the hair out of her face. The wind was cutting and I started down the steps. "You—you'll be all right here, won't you?" I said. I knew I wouldn't have cared to be stuck in that house during the night, but then it was home to her.

She said Liza would take care of everything and thanks for coming, but as I left her there standing in the open doorway with the wind blowing her black frock against her, I hoped that young Tod Palmer, or someone, would be there with her during those long, dark evening hours.

by 1945 the 10 billion dollars worth of commercial construction in the Twenties will be 20 years old and ready for modernization. By 1945, six million of those dwelling units will be unfit for use, and 18 million will call either for major reconstruction or replacement.

The need for a vast post-war construction program in many fields is already evident. This does not necessarily imply that it will all have to be done by public funds. The more study is made now of means of attracting private capital into construction, the better chance there is of attracting it promptly when the time comes.

The more thought directed now against this "inevitable" slump, the less inevitable it becomes.

Sunday School Lesson

New Birth for Christians Means Life Of Peace, Love and Righteousness Text: John 3:5-8; Acts 1:8; Romans 8:26-28; Galatians 5:22-26

By WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D.

Editor of Advances
This lesson, consisting of four passages of Scripture, begins with mystery and ends with plain practical teaching concerning character and daily life.

The mystery is the mystery of the New Birth, which Jesus said in His conversation with Nicodemus could not be explained. Nicodemus could not understand such a thing as being born again, and very frankly said so. Jesus replied to him by the illustration of the wind. "The wind bloweth where it listeth," He said, "and thou canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the spirit."

We follow the wind and know its power. There is no doubt about its reality, but we cannot explain it. So it is with the New Birth. We cannot explain the power that makes a man new, but there can be no doubt about the experience. "We know that we have passed from death unto life," says John, "because we love the brethren." There are other unmasking marks of the New Birth, that is of the new life in Christ, that men feel in themselves or that they see in others.

With this mystery of the New Birth is associated the baptism of the Holy Spirit. We cannot understand the mystery of God or the nature and relationship of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; but we see the operations of God's spirit in human life and we know, as the early disciples knew from practical experience, that the Holy Spirit is present with men to be their guide and helper.

To come to the plain, practical side of all this mystery, the baptism of the Holy Spirit is not in some miraculous thing that men can claim to have experienced that has no relation to daily living. If a man has been baptized of the Holy Spirit and the Spirit of God is in him, the fruits of that indwelling will be seen in his life and character.

The fruits of the Spirit of the Apostle Paul has defined and listed in an unmistakable way, and with detailed fullness. "The fruit of the Spirit," he says, "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control." Against these Paul says there is no law. They are the positive expressions of the good life and the God-guided life that all who seek God's guidance can develop without limitation. Here there need be no restraint, and if all men had this experience of the New Birth we should have no need of laws, or of law officers, except to direct the normal ways and relationships of men.

The higher one rises in this new life in Christ, and the more conscious he is of God's presence and guidance, the humbler is his spirit and attitude. Men of the world may glory in their wealth or success, but the richer and better the Christian becomes, the less will he boast about it. It is in this spirit that Paul admonished the Christians at Galatia, "Let us not become vainglorious, provoking one another, envying one another."

Stamps to Get Sour Gas Plant

Will De-sulphurize Sour Gas of McKamie Field

STAMPS — The first steps toward construction of a desulphurization plant for the sour gas produced at the McKamie field of Lafayette county were taken Thursday when officials of the Carter Oil Company and Atlantic Oil company, chief lease holders in the field, made plans for the location of the plant.

J. A. Todd, Magnolia, division superintendent of this section for Carter company, said that the location will depend on co-operation of citizens and landowners in making a reasonable price for proposed sites. Mr. Todd said that expenditures for the plant would be enormous and it will be necessary for oil companies to hold down costs of construction as much as possible. Construction will start soon, Mr. Todd said.

'A Yank in the RAF', Saenger, Stars Betty Grable, Tyrone Power

Stirring War Picture at Saenger Sunday

Latest 20th Century-Fox Picture Combines Combat, Love

"Never . . . have so many owed so much to so few!"

These famous words show how England feels about her protecting eagles, the valiant R. A. F. All realize that without the stamina, the vigilance, the courage and the skill of this handful of picked men, England would surely have fallen.

But all too little is known about these heroes of World War II. The headlines shout their deeds daily:

R. A. F. Bombs Berlin Again—Outnumbered Pilots Ward Off Attack on London—R. A. F. Gains Air Supremacy—but of the men who go to make up England's air force there are many unanswered questions. What sort of men are they? How do these supermen react in combat? How do they live and love? What do they think about as they speed through the skies meeting force with force?

20th Century-Fox has fashioned an answer to these and many other queries in its latest picture, "A Yank in the R. A. F." It is a picturization of them at work and at play; an attempt to bring them to the screen just as they are in life. Seen through the eyes of the Yank, who is portrayed by Tyrone Power, the picture brings into focus the things that make the R. A. F. what it is today.

"Once in a Lifetime!"

"This is a picture that is right down to earth," said Henry King, who had the enviable assignment of directing the new film.

"It is a story that comes only once in the lifetime of any director, and I am proud to have been assigned to make it. It is action, action, action!"

"But do not confuse this story with any air-screen picture you have seen. This has red-blooded men and women, real people, who live and love as real humans, who dare death, who know not the meaning of fear—an aggregation of young men accepting a challenge and pledging their lives to make all the world secure for all peace-loving people. But this is neither strictly a war story, nor an out and out aviation story. They merely constitute the background against which the picture is woven."

So spoke Henry King, and from the foregoing it is easy to see that 20th Century-Fox did not take lightly its task of bringing the adventure-filled "A Yank in the R. A. F." to the screen. Every effort went into the production of the picture to make certain that the right effect would result. The topnotch actors on the lot were assembled—Tyrone Power and Betty Grable for the romantic leads and John Sutton, Reginald Gardiner and Gladys Cooper in the supporting roles.

Dunkirk Inferno Recreated

For the picturization of the evacuation of Dunkirk, which is an important sequence of "A Yank in the R. A. F.," more than a thousand extras were assembled. The piers and beach at Dunkirk were recreated.

Exploding bombs and shell fire simulated at a fabulous cost. Motorboats, rowboats, tugs and longboats were commandeered, and the cameras ground as the most realistic battle scene ever enacted took place. Planes filled the air, crashed Messerschmitts and Spitfires dotted the beach, and the thousand extras, composed principally of Legionnaires from the extra rolls went through their paces amidst the smoke, fire and explosion that was Dunkirk. "It's an improvement over the original," claimed John Chapman, the New York Daily News' movie columnist, who witnessed the filming of the scene.

Official Approval Gained

That England approved the production of "A Yank in the R. A. F." is definitely established. Lord Beaverbrook, British Air Minister, gave his approval to the filming of actual air battles over Germany between the R. A. F. and Nazi air units, and these scenes that are shown in the picture. It was the desire of the Air Ministry that all scenes showing the work of the R. A. F. be absolutely authentic, and Production Chief Darry F. Zanuck made certain that all the false bravado and phony atmosphere of usual air epics would not clutter up the footage of "A Yank in the R. A. F." Here, for the first time, is a picture of life as it is lived by Britain's pilots—showing them as human beings with but a single ambition in life—but debunking them as superhumans, showing them as they really are.

Dinner ready?

IT'S an occasion when the boys come home from camp for a weekend and, of course, they are "raring" for Mother's home cooked meals. But Mother wants to visit with the boys and doesn't want to spend all her time in the kitchen. That's where a new automatic (CP) gas range comes in—it gives you more time for leisure, enables you to serve better meals and, best of all, it does the work without you watching and waiting, and it saves time and fuel.

Of course you don't need a special occasion to buy a new gas range, but then we all need a little stimulus sometimes to do things we know we should do. So why not get that new gas range you've been wishing for—get it now and celebrate with meals that outdo anything you've ever cooked.

You still can buy a new range on easy convenient terms to fit your budget. Liberal allowance for your old stove—small down payment.

Kroger Handles Tenderay Beef

New Tenderizing Process Explained in 'Meat' Article

In recognition of the growing interest in Tenderay beef, the nationally circulated magazine, Meat, has devoted virtually all of its current issue to articles, charts and pictures describing the discovery, development and present status of the new meat tenderizing process, according to G. E. Houston, Kroger branch manager whose stores in this area handle Tenderay beef.

In explaining the magazine's unusual handling of the subject, E. B. Natterer, publisher, wrote that he had encountered extraordinary interest among packing plant executives throughout the country in the possibilities of Tenderay, adding that there was a real demand for complete information on the process itself, as well as a report on experiences of those using it.

The magazine contains articles by Dr. George D. Bean, assistant director of Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, under whose supervision the Tenderay process was developed, and by Dr. Harvey C. Rentschler, head of Westinghouse Lamp division research laboratory, who perfected the Sterilamp used in the Tenderay process. These scientists discuss technical phases of the process.

Stephen A. Douglas, Kroger director of sales promotion, describes Kroger's experience with Tenderay since the firm's first test plant was installed early in 1939. He points out that Kroger's beef sales in the test area have increased 121 per cent since the introduction of Tenderay, and that other Kroger branches have experienced substantial gains as the result of growing consumer acceptance.

A feature of the magazine's Tenderay issue is a series of interviews with housewives who express their approval of the improved beef. Another article tells of the adoption of Tenderay beef exclusively for its diners by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

A series of charts illustrates the growing acceptance of Tenderay in various key cities, and a section of the magazine is devoted to pictures of packing plant installations.

Mr. Houston pointed out that while discovery of the Tenderay process was reported in magazines and newspapers throughout the country, Meat has provided the first exhaustive report on its success in commercial operation and acceptance by consumers.

latter part of October, proved very successful and a large number of students have already secured positions with local firms. The school offers standard courses in all business subjects. Night and day classes are offered under the capable instruction of Miss Mary Loggins.

Mrs. Rhinehart, organization representative of the Perry Business schools, announced that interest and cooperation of local people has resulted in an unusually large enrollment.

The classes, however, are limited so that every student can get detail instruction. The course takes up every phase of business separately and on completion the student will be qualified to enter any kind of business work.

For further details about the opening, attention is called to another announcement in this paper or to contact the school's headquarters in the Carrigan building on South Elm street.
